

LICENSING POLICY FOR ASIAN JOURNAL OF ALLIED HEALTH SCIENCES (AJAHS)

Introduction:

This licensing policy outlines the terms and conditions under which the content of our medical journal is licensed and distributed. The goal of this policy is to balance the need for widespread access to scientific research while protecting the intellectual property rights and integrity of our journal and its authors.

Copyright Ownership:

The medical journal holds the copyright to all original content published in the journal, including articles, reviews, editorials, and other scholarly works. Copyright ownership ensures that the journal has the exclusive right to reproduce, distribute, and display the published content.

Open Access:

In line with our commitment to promoting global knowledge sharing, our medical journal follows an open access policy. This means that all content published in the journal is freely available to the public without any subscription or pay wall barriers. Readers can access, read, download, and share the content for non-commercial purposes, provided proper attribution is given to the authors and the journal.

Creative Commons License:

To facilitate the open access dissemination of our content, we use Creative Commons licenses. Authors of published articles are required to select a specific Creative Commons license that determines the permissions granted to readers regarding the use, distribution, and modification of their work. We encourage authors to choose licenses that allow for maximum reuse and distribution of their research while respecting their rights as creators.

Author Retention of Rights:

While the journal holds the copyright to the published content, authors retain certain rights to their work. These rights include the ability to reproduce, distribute, and display their own articles for personal or non-commercial purposes, and to incorporate their work into subsequent publications with proper attribution to the original publication in our journal.

Commercial Use and Republishing:

Commercial use of the journal's content, such as reproduction, distribution, or adaptation for commercial purposes, requires explicit permission from the journal. Republishing articles or significant portions of them in other publications or platforms also requires permission from both the journal and the authors. Such requests will be considered on a case-by-case basis, taking into account factors such as the intended use, attribution, and potential impact on the journal and its authors.

Attribution:

Users who utilize content from our medical journal must provide appropriate attribution to the authors and the journal. This includes clearly citing the article's title, authors' names, journal name, volume, issue, page numbers, and a direct link to the original article. Failure to provide proper attribution constitutes a violation of our licensing policy.

Enforcement:

The medical journal reserves the right to take appropriate legal action against individuals or entities found to be in violation of this licensing policy. This may include issuing takedown notices, pursuing damages, or seeking injunctive relief to protect the intellectual property rights of the journal and its authors.

Policy Updates:

This licensing policy may be updated periodically to reflect changes in the legal and publishing landscape or the evolving needs of the medical journal. Any updates to the policy will be communicated through the journal's website or other appropriate channels.
